

Customary Governance
Conservation Paradigm
is for Sustained Biocultural
Diversity for Food
Sovereignty...among others

Florence Daguitan, TEBTEBBA/ 15-11- 2014
World's Park Congress, Sydney, Australia

Core Messages

Indigenous peoples' conservation is an integral part of customary sustainable resource use in all the different parts of their territories. It is part of their indigenous knowledge of territory management which is an applied ecosystems-based approach with a strong cultural and spiritual dimension that is biased for the commons... quote re lands of the commons

In the case of Tinoc, the adoption of industrial agriculture wrecked havoc to the environment and habitats of natural resources and bio cultural diversity in areas Which are now dominantly.. The problem of rampant illnesses among children, the problem of indebtedness, and food insecurity “ quote from Ama Biyaw...

Revitalization...

-  food from the wilds including,
-  traditional occupation honey gathering